Six years passed, and Harold Clayton was sinning name and fame in his own land, in his profession as an artist. Standing one night in a crowded assembly, ve you a sitting, and transfer her coloring canvas, you will render yourself immore canvas, you will render yourself immore.

"Is she, then, so beautiful?" he questioned.

"Undge for yourself!" she lightly rejoined, sdirg him to a Little group doing homage the fair girl in its centre.

"Is she, then, so beautiful?" he questioned.

Lospos, May 11—Consols, 98-16 money, 99-16 money, to the fair girl in its centre.

"Miss Rayburn—Mr. Chayton," were the formal words of the introduction, as Harold lowed in acknowledgment before the woman his artistic eye occlessed the most beautiful that in all his warderings he ever met. Before the evening was ended he might have added the only woman he had ever layed, since she had wakened in him as interest in noisy at twee strength of the coly woman he had ever layed, since she had wakened in him as interest in noisy at twee strength.

Through the nort week her lace haussed him. Then they not again and the cherm grow and deepened. He could not dely it, Se scircely acknowledged it to himself; only away from Miss. Eayburn he was restless and uneasy, until he again found himself within the scope of her fascinutions.

in no scope of her fascinations.

Yet her nature retained an eniggm to him. Although so yours in years, so beautiful in Jurm and features, she seemed cold even to laughtiness, reticent almost to score.

It was as though some exquisite marble status had risen it his pathway, which might some day warm into life.

She welcomed him whenever they met with manner which, while it gave him no cause for complaint, yet chilled the hope springing within his breast.

One day, on going to her home, the servant that who was yery ill. This knowledge hought other knewledge—the fact that he could no longer conseal from himself that he bred hor hope his life shappiness.

was admitted into her presence.
She was very white, very fragile, but isose beautiful than in the odoring of perfect health. A new expression, too, was in the violet eyes ruised to welcome him.
"I am very glad to meet you again," she said gently. "I hear you have been auxious whoutine. You were very kind."
Then the words he had not meant to speak an burst from his live.

Then the words he had not meant to speak burst from his lip.

"Anxious?" he said. "Can a man, Miss Rayburn, perishing of hunger hear of the famine without a shudder? I am presumptions, you will say. It is true. What is my life, with its many sealed pages in which you you could never look, that I should dare offer by to you? And yet, purified by your love, I would try to make it more wortry. Tell me—answer me! If I sorrous Jacob served for Rache!, is there hope that I may win you? My darling! my darling! I love you! I can not live my life without you. Will you no share it?"
